Continuing the previous editions, this bibliography presents dissertations produced mainly from universities in Australia, America, and Canada. Not only dissertations, some important theses are also featured in this bibliography. The period 1980-1999 is a crucial period in the process of Indonesian Islamic studies. Since 1990 the project of sending bachelor graduates to continue their master to McGill University resulted in Indonesian Islamic studies master theses produced by this universities. On the one hand, this theses can be used as an evidence that Indonesian scholars were able to “introduce” Indonesian Islam abroad; on the other hand, this introduction focuses on leaders thought—which is then dominated the pattern of Islamic studies in Indonesian Islamic higher education institutions. In comparison, dissertation/thesis from the universities in the United States and Australia shows notable interesting assumption that during that period the scholars whose background are Islamic studies tend to produce theological-doctrinal dissertation/thesis as well as that of leaders-thought; while scholars with social and cultural background tend to review Islam from the attending problems in society.
